User can click on the subnavigation to see specific categories of photos

3

Display icon that represents panoramic photos. Do not have to use the wording used above to explain the icon

View link opens Google Earth and zooms to the Civil War Trails region. All panoramic photo icons will appear.

Story. Include links within story for data points that are mentioned. Links takes user to that data point's detail page. E.g. there is mention of a cemetery – the cemetery's name is a link and takes the user to the cemetery's detail page. Mention that this story is pulled from a physical landmark called a pedestal. Include a link to the pedestal's detail page to learn more about it.

User can expand and hide the extraneous information. Just give general information in the hidden state – title, date range, location, and brief description. For locations, if have multiple ones, just state "Multiple Locations" and then list them out when expanded. It is recommended to just always give general information, and then to give more detailed information when user goes to that event's page.
